Content :	Meaning, signification, expression The aim of our work will be to elucidate three key-notions of the phenomenology of language and to approach some specific problems concerned by them. Starting from the husserlian theory of signification (Bedeutung), which defines it in relation to indication, we will show the complexity of the phenomenological problem of expression (Ausdruck). This problem concerns the formation of language in the intentional intuitive acts and in the field of affectivity. The phenomenological question of meaning (Sinn) will be introduced in order to open the investigation field of this theme, relating the problems present at the institution of meaning (Sinnstiftung) to its latent formation (Sinnbildung). The analysis of language and expression by Maurice Merleau-Ponty will complete the husserlian researches on the passive synthesis of consciousness, underlying the importance of an eidetical field which is not recovering exactly the field of logical essences. The observance of this specific eidetical field will allow us to show the relations the language has with imagination and intersubjectivity.
