Main themes :	The course deals with the comparative study of language with respect to language typology (and language universals), with comparative grammar, and with contrastive linguistics. The methodological aspects and the areas of research will be illustrated with examples from the Germanic and the Romance languages. Modern aspects of contrastive linguistics will be especially highlighted.
Aims :	At the end of the course students should : - have developed theoretical and practical knowledge in comparative grammar and contrastive linguistics, especially with respect to a comparative study of the Germanic and the Romance languages, - have developed the ability to describe and compare the functioning of several language systems on the basis of linguistic varieties, - be able to apply the acquired theoretical knowledge on a certain subject in the field of contrastive linguistics. The contribution of this Teaching Unit to the development and command of the skills and learning outcomes of the programme(s) can be accessed at the end of this sheet, in the section entitled "Programmes/courses offering this Teaching Unit".
Evaluation methods :	Written exam and group work on a topic of contrastive linguistics.

Content :	This course will make the students sensitive to comparative language studies. It will briefly deal with the origins of the most European languages, with special emphasis on the origins of Germanic and Romance languages, as well as on the process of standardisation of different languages and the influences of these different languages with respect to each other. Afterwards the methodological aspects of language typology and contrastive linguistics will be addressed. The examples that will be discussed are mainly from the Germanic and Romance languages.
