Content :	Poverty is first and foremost the result of a process of political, social and mediatical construction and categorization which leads to the designation of social categories considered as marginal, and which defines the " appropriate " treatment (sanc-tion or help), and distinguishes " good " and " bad " poors. For a few years, the " Social Active State " vocabulary has imposed itself for the legitimization of new modes of State inter-vention, increasingly based on encouragement measures and systems of follow-up encouraging the activation of social beneficiaries (unemployed, social assisted). The leading questions will be the following: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> -How are social policies constructed ? How do images of "good" and "bad " poor evolve ? What are the ideological divisions on the Active Social State ? - Which normative transformations affect social work professionals ? How do they impact on their professional roles and identities? How do they react to recompose their roles and identities (individually and collectively, discursively and practi-cally)? - What are the modes of identity management of one's social experience ? How do people construct themselves as subjects when they are " subjected " ? Pedagogically, each lecture will include a detailed report on a selected theme, based on existing research on public policies (social policies, " prevention and security " policies, criminal law policies) and on their conse-quences for their operators and beneficiaries. The lecture will also rely on the analysis of documents, visual or written, and of research material (interviews, observation reports) submitted to the students.

Other infos :	The evaluation will rely on the making of a personal work. The students will be asked, individually or in sub-groups, to analyse a concrete system in the field of social work, in relation to the categories of analysis and of questioning described in the course. This work will be subject to a first oral presentation by the student, allowing a critical discussion and a formative evaluation. The formative and certificative evaluation will be based on explicit criteria of (i) quality of the system description, (ii) of conceptual mastery and (iii) of reasoning coherence. <ul style="list-style-type: none"> - A synthetic syllabus including the structure of the course and theoretical contributions; - A portfolio of readings, constituted of texts of reference, will serve as a basis or as an illustration for the presentation. Students may be requested to prepare the texts' reading and analysis; - A portfolio of illustrative and iconographical material.
