Language :	French
Place of the course	Louvain-la-Neuve
Main themes	The course first analyses the definitions and processes of criminal law, and its relations with other branches of law (at national, international and European level). The emphasis is put on the sources of criminal law, their interpretation, and the application of criminal statutes in space and time. The course also covers the classifications of offences, their conditions (legal element, actus reus, mens rea) and the agents. The foundations, characteristics, objectives, types and delivery of penalties are examined. Security measures and the civil consequences of offences are analysed. An introduction to armed conflict law and humanitarian law is also given. Possible reforms and relevant aspects of comparative law are considered. The course consists of lectures completed, where necessary, by other teaching methods. The syllabus should be available to the students at the beginning of the term. Compulsory sessions of practical training (12 hours) provide the students with the opportunity to develop a practical approach of the subjects taught. These sessions are prepared by the students, whose performances are evaluated by an assistant. Together with the head of the department, the teacher sees that the practical training and the lectures are coherent and well connected, including with respect to the evaluation.
Learning outcomes
Evaluation methods	The exam consists of three parts for students who also take the practical exercises: - One of the preparations made by the student before the face-to-face course which is drawn during the last class - An exercise question of the type done during the practical sessions - A written exam For students who do not take the practical exercises, the exam does not include a question related to the practical exercises, which is replaced by an additional question related to the lecture. During the face-to-face classes, the focus is on the students' questions following their preparation work, on the most complicated aspects of the subject and on case studies in order to put into practice the theory studied during the preparation.
Teaching methods	Each class is preceded by a preparation work to be submitted on moodle the day before the class. One of these preparations will be drawn at random during the last class and will constitute a question for the exam. During the face-to-face classes, the focus is on the students' questions following their preparation work, on the most complicated aspects of the subject and on case studies in order to put into practice the theory studied during the preparation. Interactivity between teachers and students is essential to make the course as interesting as it is enjoyable.
