Learning outcomes	At the end of this learning unit, the student is able to : <ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1 identify and contextualize authors and works related to the theme studied; 2 write an essay related to the year's theme, involving a selection of relevant excerpts from the works studied and including literary, historical, stylistic and cultural considerations; 3 conduct personal research as an extension of the course.
Evaluation methods	Personal oral presentation during the term (20%) and written examen during the session consisting of an essay (50%) and MCQ (30%).
Teaching methods	The seminar consists of lectures based on reading assignment.
Content	The seminar will study literary creation (poiësis) during the Archaic period under its double aspect (composition and performance). We will focus on the epic—and, more specifically, the Homeric Iliad—but students will be encouraged to think about literature during the Archaic period in a wider context, by considering its relations with social, political and cultural structures. They will achieve a new understanding of the concepts of literary author, work, genre, and audience. The seminar will also focus on the transmission of epic, first in its oral phase, then in its written phase. In this respect, we will consider the difficulties posed by the manuscript tradition and textual editions of epic. Finally, the seminar will analyze the Early Archaic cultural concepts and institutions conveyed by the epic, in particular glory (kleos apthiton), sorrow (akhos, penthos, aethlos), emulation (eris, agôn), and justice (timê, themis, dikê, moira, kosmos).
