It gives an introduction to specific questions of morphology, syntax and lexicology arising from the study of Biblical texts. Attention is paid to the influences, be they semitisms or latinisms, to the use of literary genres and to the phenomenon of bilingualism. Students in Biblical studies are invited to get accustomed to the working tools of classical philology, as classical philologists are to get accustomed to the working tools of Biblical studies. The course consists of commented readings of selected texts.
