COMU2275 The practice of investigative journalism and reporting on radio and television

[30h] 4 credits

Teacher(s): Serge Flamé, Françoise Wallemacq
Language: French
Level: Second cycle

Aims

This workshop is based on what has been learned on the practical two-year degree course of radio and television workshops. It is restricted to students on two-year degree courses, and aims to extend the learning of journalistic skills beyond a treatment of daily news.

Main themes

This seminar will tackle the making of large-format productions that call for fieldwork in both radio and television journalism. It will seek to familiarise students with narrative approaches that are appropriate to both forms of media, and to situate the treatment of events by journalists in the framework of ongoing production.

Content and teaching methods

- Introduction to the processes of long term investigative work and reporting specifically of the type found in radio and on television.
 - The production of practical investigative and reporting work on radio and television.
 - The design and realisation of a complete journalistic television product calling for an understanding of all the components associated with television.
- Individual work and/or group work, depending on supports.
