General structure of the programme

1. The second cycle of university studies ("licence") diploma in Sociology is obtained at the end of four years of studies, spread over two years of first cycle of studies ("candidature") and two years of "licence". The two years of "candidature" are partially common to all the departments of the Faculty of Economic, Social and Political Sciences and are organised directly under the authority of the Faculty.
2. The "licence" programme is spread over two years of studies and covers a total volume of 795 hours of courses and seminars as well as the writing of a thesis at the end of the course. The students must follow at least 495 hours of courses in the first year, to be able to combine the rest of their programme in the second year with the preparation of their thesis.
3. One information session is organised at the beginning of the academic year to help each student specify his study project and compose his programme.
4. Apprenticeship : the students are requested to refer to the Departmental regulation on the subject.
5. Thesis : the students are requested to refer to the Departmental regulation on the subject.
6. The students of the first year must register a course on Religious Sciences to their programme.
